The Franco-Soviet Pact, which is engaging the attention of all Europe, the text of which has just been published, will remain in force for five years. It provides that in the event of either of the signatories being in danger of aggression from any European state, the signatories will immediately consult with regard to measures to be taken for the enforcement of the provisions of Article X of the League Covenant.

In the event of either of the signatories being subjected to unprovoked aggression by any European state, the other shall immediately come to the assistance of the victim.

The privisions of the treaty will not be carried out in any way which might be inconsistent with previous treaty obligations. Each signatory is free to become a party, by mutual consent, to a like agreement, the obligations of which shall replace those resulting from this treaty, it is made clear.—Reuter Special.

The protocol of the Franco-Sovlet Pact lays down that in the event of unprovoked aggression on the part of any European state each signatory shall immediately go to the assistance of the other by complying with the recommendations of the League of Nations Council as soon as they are issued, under Article XVI of the League Covenant.

Should the Council not issue such recommendations or fail to reach a unanimous decision upon the matter, the obligation of mutual assistance would nevertheless apply.

The undertakings to assist, in the event of aggression, to subdue the offending nation or nations, refer only to hostile acts against the two signatories, or against territories ander their jurisdiction.

The obligation of intervention becomes a fact only within the tri- the International Cotton Congress limits contemplated in the partite agreement previously pro- here. jected between Russia, France and Germany, under which bach of the powers would have pledged to assist either of others which was subjected aggression on the part of one of the three signatory states .-Reuter.

London, May 3.

Mr. Stanley Baldwin, presiding at a Princose Loague demonstration said the position of the Crown and of the King in this country was not merely a matter of sentiment, important as that was. It was a matter of most profound political interest and importance If in any entaclysm the Crown Tal vanished the Empire would vanish Nazi Agents

"As older Imperial ties become attenuated the tie of the Crown becomes stronger and more personal every year we live. We have cyldence of that to-day in the tone and spirit and temper of the demonstrations and thanksgivings which are patent throughout the world, from one end of the Empire to the other. So we may pray that the Crown, that great symbol of our race and of our unity throughout the world, may be perpetual with the constitution of our country;

PROBLEMS FOR WAR WIZARDS

MOVING MILLIONS OF MEN

HIGH SPEED ARMIES

Washington.

Military logicians here discredit the imminence of a European war, on the basis of professional assumptions that Germany is not ready to crash the "steel ring" of France, Italy, and 'Poland, and that France is not sufficiently war" on her part to retard the military recovery of Germany.

Political crisis in Europe, with Check colourings that give professional interest in three aspects of a possible future war;

> First, the extent to which military operations, particularly acronautical and gas, might be waged against civil populations or strategical industrial sites;

Second, the question whether a future large conflict would be a "war of movement" or a semistatic affair of trenches and slow blasting as in 1914-18;

Third, the ability of increasingly mechanised combat armies to maintain under war conditions the requisite volume of supplies and technical equipment.

On point number one, some professional military experts believe that popular opinion overestimates the purely military importance o air raids and gas bombing against. SOAK half a pint of well-washed civilian communities. The effects Soak haricot beans in a quart of of such attempts, it is believed, are transient; and the agencies of defence have kept pace with the weapons of attack. Hence, in a a case of armies-versus-armies, and not of a premeditated slaughter of civilian masses.

On point two, there seems con- gently for ten minutes, season to siderable difference of opinion among experts. Some think that a great new struggle would be a "war of manœuvre," with speed and mobility resulting from mechanical transport likely to avert a static situation.

FAST WARFARE

With armoured automobiles moving at 60 to 80 miles per hour, tanks at 40 to 50 and bombing planes at 150 to 250, raids could be directed against lines of communication. Fast units could pass vital military nerve centres.

-Another view, however, is that the next war, as the last one, will be a matter of promptly mobilising and getting to the front millions of men. The sheer mass of these human aggregations, some believe, will be so great as to prevent a "war of manœuvre." Such warfare, it is contended, cannot be effectively waged with armies larger than a half million, whereas any great power hereafter involved in an international struggle would have a million or more men at the

In any case, it is pointed out, successful war of manœuvre would require an extraordinary perfection of staff work, and tremendous behind-the-lines ganisation to manufacture transport the necessary supplies.

MOTOR CAVALRY

On point three, experts who have watched the difficult problems produced by the mechanisation of industry are cautious in appraising the military effectiveness of the projected extraordinary mechanisation of warfare. Although the immediate advantages of "motor" cavalry" and the various military automatons are apparent, an army remote from industrial centres

The mere problem of, moving a modern army is an immense task in transportation. Assuming, for example, that the United States had occasion to bring into action a field army, consisting of three corps of three divisions each. This would consist of 344,069 men and 91,026 animals. In marching order, on the road, the foot troops and animals would stretch out for 231.8 miles, the motor columns 371.3 miles; the tractor columns, 40.6 miles; a total of 643.6 miles.

If such an army were to be moved by rail it would require 1,350 railway trains. Thus the immense problem of organising a "war of movement" is apparent .-United Press.

WARNED OF LABOUR CRISIS

FRENCHMAN FORESAW UNEMPLOYMENT

MANUAL LABOUR DISPLACED

Paris, April 20. The unlimited use of machinery in industry as a cause for the present economic crisis was predicted by a member of the French Academy more than a century ago.

On June 1, 1833, the Baron de Morogues, member of the Superior-Council of Agriculture, stepped on the tribune of the Academy of Sciences to read his thesis - a prophetic one-on the utility and inconveniences of machinery and the means to control and assure Its continued use in agriculture.

After having pointed out that the employment of mechanical implements, while increasing production, would give the white race better means to satisfy its needs and bring to it the added joy of forcing Asia to be an economic tributary to Europe, the speaker than painted the other side of the picture. He continued without hesitation:

"All machinery being aubstituted for manual labour, will naturally render unnecessary a large percentage of the workers who, formerly found their aubaistence in manual labour. As everyone's points of view are rarely in agreement, further than those touching their material needs and families; one can foresee the workers' coming irritation against all those who will appear to be the cause of destitution to which they will be reduced. The disgraceful excesses to which they will be carried as a result of their impoverished state and their friction will readily be.

In citing, statistics on factory labour in England, already quite developed at this epoch, the speaker went on to any that social good was relative and that the plight of the worker who found it increasingly difficult to earn sufficient for his daily subsistence, was more miserable in manufacturing villages than elsewhere, De Morogues concluded with the prediction that if factories continued to displace hand labour, then social, moral and hygienic dangers would show a corresponding increase, bringing in its wake suicides and crime.

This report, which was far from optimistic, made a great impression on the audience and a memorandum was immediately around enemy lines, and strike at a woman named Remedios Gon- drafted to the Royal Government. zalez persuaded a boy to bring her It was couched in the same plain terms_that_de_Morogues-had-used in his speech, telling of the increased number of poor with the displacement of manual labour and the resulting crime and danger to which the nation would be subject. -United Press.

On Monday, 6th May, the British Empire is giving thanks and praise that for 25 years His Majesty King George V has been preserved to bear the sceptre of sovereignty and maintain the unity of the Empire. The Charitable Collection Sub-Committee is providing boxes for the purpose of the collection and all those who wish to assist in this laudable object are asked to communicate with the Honourable Dr. R. H. Ketewall, C.M.G., LL.D., of China: Building, Hongkong, who is representing the Chinese Sub-Committee formed for this purpose or to Mr. S. F. FRENCH RECRUITS

FIRST OF NEW ARMY

DEARTH OF MAN POWER

Paris, April 22.

France's first recruits under the new military law extending the military service, in order to keep the army strength to normal level join the army to-morrow, to serve for eighteen months. The new compulsory service law, which the Germans blamed for Herr litter's decision to introduce conscription in the Reich in contravention of the military clauses of the Versailles Treaty, was voted by the French Chamber of Deputies on March 13.

Introduced to offset the de-creases in births during the lean years of childbirth during the War period, which is now causing a dearth of man power for the army, the law aims at providing sufficiont recruits to give France a standing army, including volunteer forces, of 270,000 men on metropolitan soil.

The recruits who go off to barracks to-morrow to serve eighteen months are lucky compared with the next class called up, which will have to serve in the Army for two years, as will each annual class until the end of 1939.

The army Rill increasing com-pulsory service to the same-level as existed in March, 1928, was considered necessary to provide suffi-cient troops to occupy the new-frontier fortifications facing Ger-many, as well as to provide a covering force in the rear which would be strong enough to offset any enemy advance while the normal machinery of mobilisation of the nation for war goes into opera-

· France's military leaders argued that, while twelve months' military service was workable so long as the normal number of recruits were available, the country dare not risk such a short term of training during the period when the Army would be reduced to meagre proportions because of the reduc-tion of the man power available under the Conscription Law previously existing.

During the debate in the Chamber, former Minister of War, Colonel Jean Fabryn declared that France was exposed to real danger from a military point of view because of the weakened backbone of the Army, due to the fact that the regular forces were small while the conscripts did not undergo long enough training to fit them to become good soldiers immediateupon mobilisation .- United

MUZZLING SPANISH PRESS

STRICT CENSORSHIP SUGGESTED

OWNERSHIP

RULES Madrid, April 21.

The freedom of the Spanish press appears doomed if a press law introduced in Parliament is approved as it now stands. If would submit newspapers, motion pictures, radio and phonographs to a censorship on almost the slightest provocation.

Even the monarchist newspaper "ABC," which has been campaigning for a press law to prevent so-called excesses by extremist newspapers, expressed astonishment at the proposed law which, it said, "would be equivalent to delivering the press, its function, and its rights, to the arbitrariness and conveniences of the government. If the government is given this law it could dispose of the press according to it's whims and make the newspapers according to its taste. Never in any regime has the local press been treated with such tenacious aversion and continuous hostility. After increasing extensively the responsibilities of the press and the most effective procedures for demanding these responsibilities, the law would establish the censorship as a normal recourse of the government."

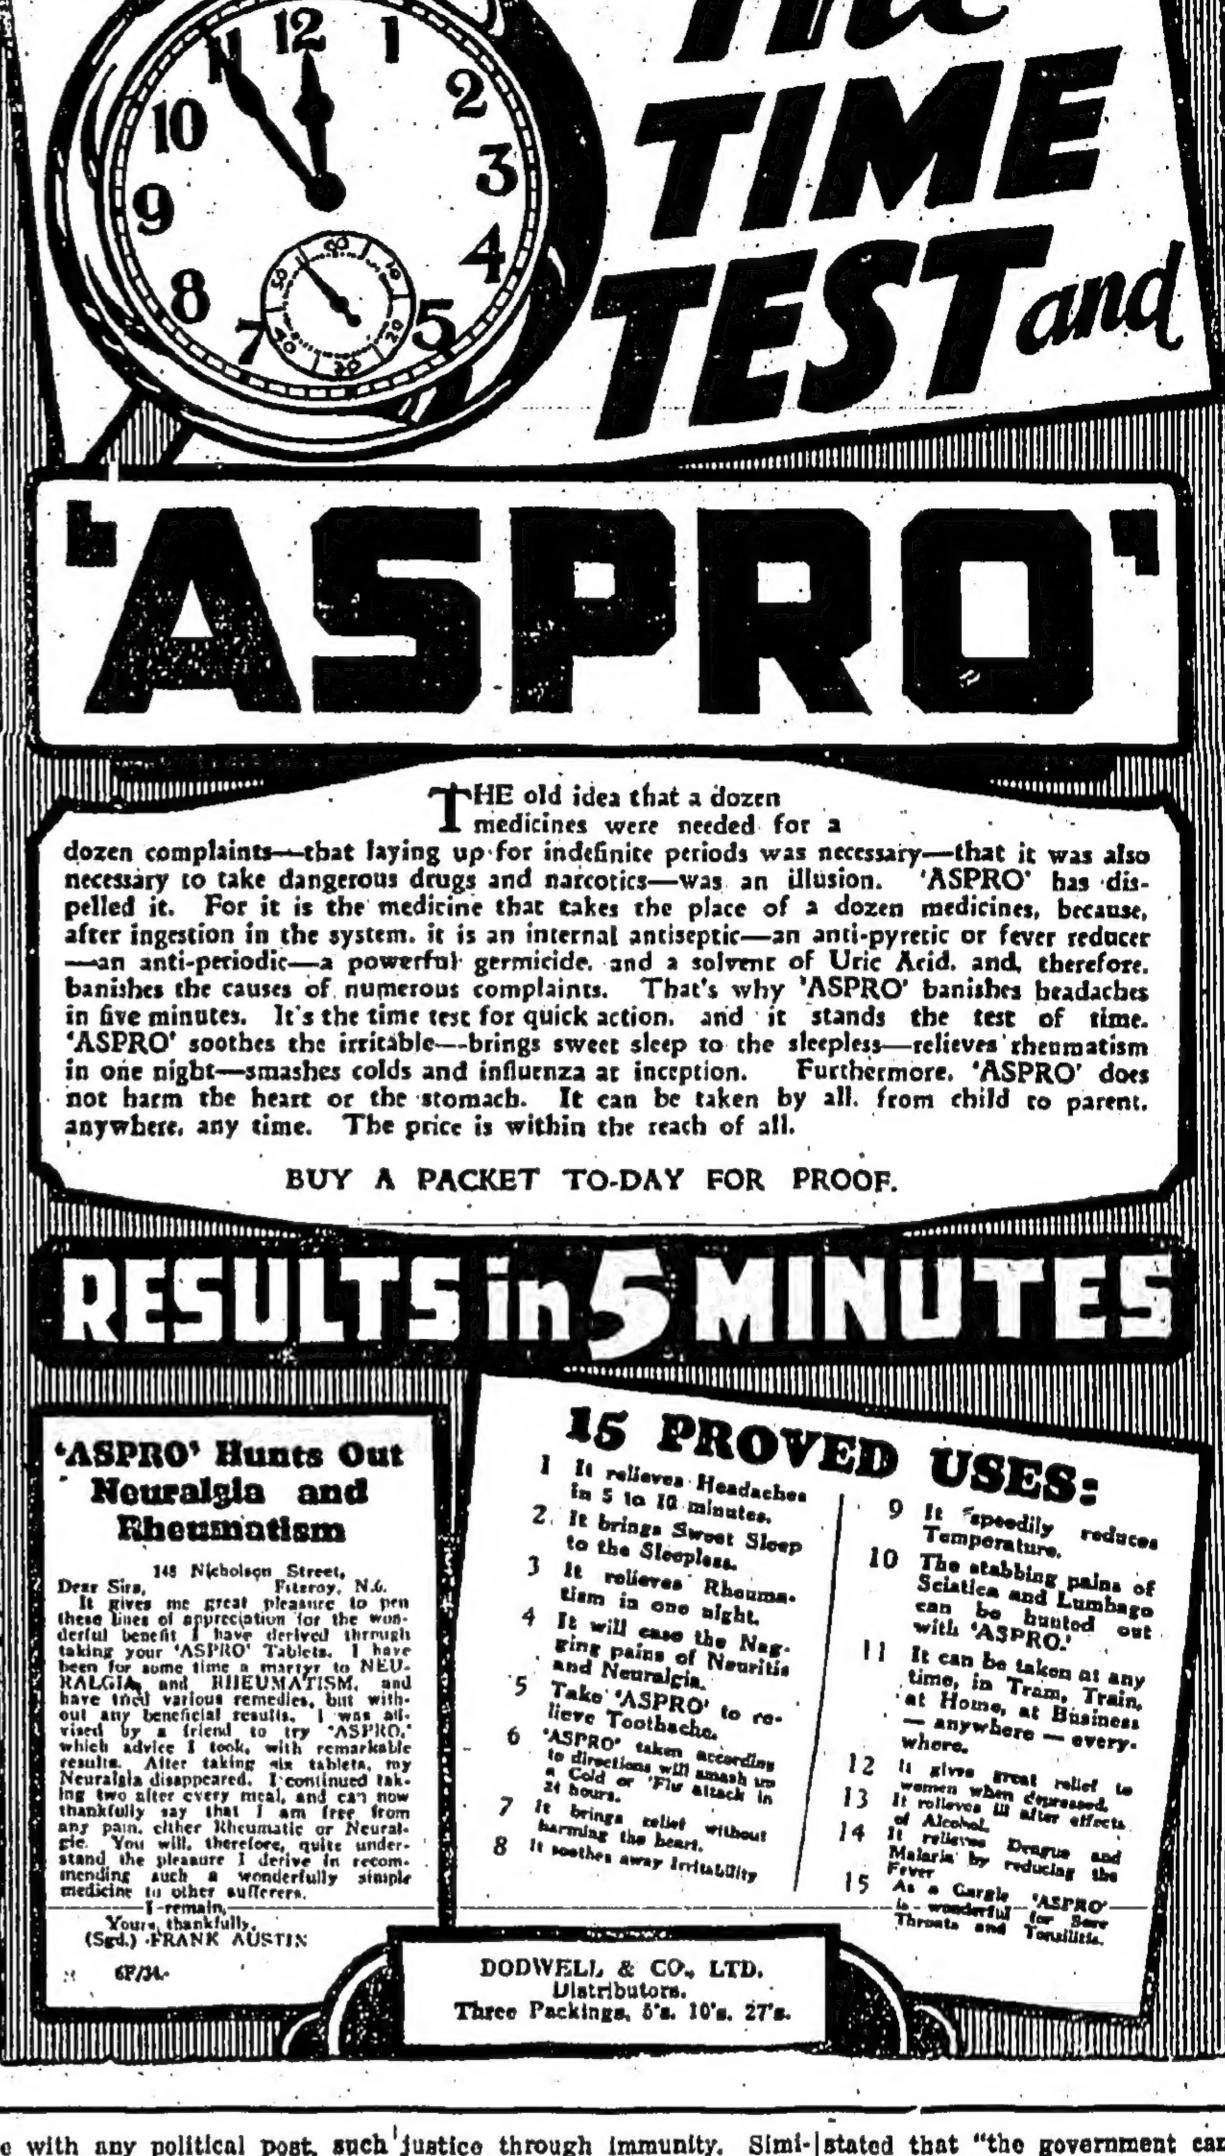

The press law project comes after the Spanish press and all cables—press and private—have been subject to a rigid censorship ever since last October. The Hight Wing elements demanded a preslaw because they claimed the revolutionary sentiments which led to the October blood-letting were provoked by inflammatory articles in the Left Wing press.

NO FOREIGNERS?

The Minister of Interior, Senor Seun Eloy Vaquero, who aided in drafting the projected law, ex-pressed the opinion that the law ought to include a provision that the directors of foreign news. agencies functioning in Spain be Spaniards and not foreigners. A clause to that effect is not contained in the present draft of the law.

The bill is unusually detailed, covering five full newspaper columns. It would affect "the press in general, the reproduction of ideas, opinions or news on phonograph records and their diffusion by radio, motion pictures or still pictures."

Any person or group desiring to establish a newspaper would have to obtain governmental authorisa-tion. The proprietor of the news-paper would have to submit a report to the government regarding the paper's financial standing. Seventy-five per cent of the capital would have to be held by Spanish citizens. Directors of Spanish ble with any political post, such justice through immunity. Siminated that "the government can newspapers would have to be sadeputy. Thus anyone having larly the purpose of having Spanish adults.

SECURITY

If you live with the muzzle of a sixteen-inch gun sticking into your back yard; you begin to have serious thoughts about preventing war. That was the explanation, in brief, of the European settlement proposed in London. Rome, Paris, Berlin, Brussels and London all rest-or writhe-under the prospect of a devastating bombardment from the air before war is even declared. The new speed of aeropinnes has pushed all these capitals within an hour or two of the air bases of possible enemies. They can count the minutes it would take to put something worse than a thousand "big berthas" above their very heads. TRULY BELOVED MONARCH

COURAGE KEYNOTE OF REIGN

THRONE NOW STANDS FIRMER THAN EVER BEFORE

(By a Special Correspondent.)

"I-take courage and hopefully look into the future; strong in my faith in God, trusting my people, and cherishing the laws and constitution of my beloved -

THESE were the words King George addressed to his people on the day after his Accession, and how faithfully he has kept them during these twentyfive years, the Empire-wide rejoicing is appropriate and sufficient testimony. His courage has never wavered even in the darkest and most difficult hours -and he has had his full share of them. No shadow has dimmed the mutual confidence between him and his subjects.

His Majesty's respect for the Constitution has been shown in both letter and spirit. Thus it is that, after a quarter of a century which has seen half the thrones of Europe crash into ruins, the British throne stands firmer than ever, "broad based upon the people's will."

King and people have passed through testing times together-a grave constitutional crisis, the greatest war in history, acute strike' which menaged the whole social fabric, and prolonged anxiety arising from industrial depression and international uncertainty. They have together come nafely through them all, and the experience has brought them far closer than if they had shared only times of peace and prosperity. Common sorrow knits the strongest ties.

Perhaps the nation would never have realised how vital these ties are, had they not come so near to being severed six years ago, when the King lay at death's door for weeks, and hope of his recovery had almost been abandoned. That experience, bringing a conscious-ness of attachment to the person of the Sovereign as well as to his throne, was undoubtedly an element in the spontaneous demonstrations which marked the wedding of the Duke and Duchess of Kent last autumn. It was something more than a figure of speech, when the King in the course of his last Christmas Day broadenst from Sandringham alluded to himself as "the head of a great and wide-spread family",

FORTUNATE MONARCH

Comparisons are proverbially odious, but they are generally interesting, sometimes instructive, and on this occasion almost inevitable. King George was in many respects more fortunate than either of his predecessors.

Victoria came to the throng when she was little more than a girl, carefully and even artificially nurtured, but with a native wit which enabled her to profit by the guidance of the shrewd advisers who surrounded her. She had never been out of England, and to the end of her long day she saw nothing of her Empire overseas.

Edward the Seventh, man of the world and on familiar personal terms with the crowned heads and statesmen of Europe, was sixty when he became King, and, though he had paid a visit to India and the East as a young man, the him almost equally ignorant of the realm over which he was to rule. In affairs of state he had been allowed to take little part.

King George ascended the throne as the most widely travelled monarch who had ever occupied it, and further equipped by the encouragement - which his father, profiting from his own melancholy experience, had given him to study public affairs and establish close personal contact with the statesmen who were destined to advise him. Lord Esher in his diary. described him as "the first member the meaning of Britain overseas" matter with which sho held they had nothing to do.

On the first of their two cruises the midshipmen-for such they had now become-visited the Mediterranean and the West Indies; on the second they saw South Africa, Ceylon, India, Hongkong, Japan, and Australia. Life at sea was interrupted for Prince George by three months at Lausanno in order that he might learn French, but with indifferent results, as he regretfully admitted when, in the course of time, his son had reached the same age.

SEAMANSHIP HONOURS

On his ninoteenth birthday, the carliest: permitted date, Prince George having passed his examina-tions, in which he gained first-class honours in senmanship, was pro-moted to sub-lieutenant. He went through the normal courses training at Greenwich and H.M.S. Excellent at Portsmouth. and was graded first-class in four of the five examination subjects.

According-to-the-testimony-ofhis superiors, he was a thoroughly efficient and popular officer, and one of them declared that his captains never felt so safe, or able to turn in with less concern, than when Prince George was officer of the watch. As in the earlier stages, he had to take the rough with the smooth, and one day, when a Tur-kish Pasha came on board to pay his respects, he was horrified to meet the Prince coaling ship and black as any Arab.

In 1886 he was appointed to in it, and he has continued to keep himself abreast of all its latest technical developments.

EMPIRE TRAVEL

For Prince George the death of his brother—at a time when he himself was recovering from s serious attack of enteric fevermeant a complete change of life. He had in effect to train himself for a new and at first much less congenial career. He set himself doggedly to his task. When I hear him nowadays delivering his speech from the Throne when he opens Parliament, and note how he makes his voice carry in a Chamber notoriously defective in the neousties, I east my mind back to one of his first public appearances. Sitting within a couple of yards of him, I could see he was trembling like a leaf, and it was with difficulty that he stammered out a few halting sentences.

-To-this-day-he-dislikes-publicspeaking, and hates the coremonial in which his father revelled. But he has schooled himself and by the time he took his great Imperial tour on the Ophir lie had gained confidence, and with it considerable skill. The immediate purpose of his journey, which he undertook at the express wish of Queen Victoria, was to mark the establishment of the Commonwealth of Australia, and to open the first Federal Parliament.

. By this time he had been created Duke of York, had married Princess May (in 1803), and had had several years of apprentice-

WAR YEARS.

The story of the European War is that of the nation rather than the Sovereign. Up to the last moment in August, 1914, the King was using his personal influence with the German and the Russian Emperors, both of them his cousins, to join him and his York-with the Air Force were on active service. He encouraged his troops by his addresses and by his repeated visits to the scat of war; he met Allied Ministers and soldlers; he stimulated civilian movements for the benefit of the troops and their dependants. He set an example by supporting with enthusiasm the movement for economy, foregoing a substantial part of his income, and joining in the economy campaign, even to the extent of banishing all forms of alcohol from the royal table.

His last visit to the Front, shortly before the Armistice, was marred by an unfortunate accident. Sir Douglas Halg's charger, which he was riding, was startled by the cheers of the troops, reared, and fell backwards, severely crushing its rider. He made light of his injuries, but it may be revealed now that they left traces which added greatly to the anxieties of his doctors when he had his serious illness in November 1928.

I happened to be in the United States at that time, and had it brought home to me, as I had never realised before, that King George is more than an Imperial figure. Everywhere Americans were anxious for news of "the King", whom they seemed to think ulmost as much theirs as ours. The services of Thanksgiving Day were marked by prayers for His Majesty's recovery. Anxlety was not limited to men and women of British birth or descent; "it was shared by "100 per cent. Americans"; and its prevalence served as a useful reminder that, underlying external controversies and differences, there is a doen community of feeling between the two branches of the Englishspeaking race. At home the weeks of anxiety were felt afterwards to have been almost worth while, having made the nation and Empire conscious of what it had been so long inclined to take for granted -the element of personal affection which permeates the relations between King and people.

FIRST SOCIALIST MINISTRY.

King George has the distinction of being the first British monarch to be advised by Socialist Ministers. Those who anticipated difficulties from that situation were unappreciative of the elasticity of the British constitution, and the tact of the persons concerned. It is no secret that Mr. Ramsay Mac-Donald, and still more, some of his colleagues with less knowledge of public affairs, were surprised by of their point of view, and his readiness to study both their official and their personal convenience. Presumably they had expected to be treated merely with rigid and chilly correctness. They foundthat the King, and in social relationships, the Queen, were cordially anxious to put at their case men and women who had no experience of Court formalities.

During his twenty-five years the King has had five Prime Ministers -Mr. Asquith, Mr. Lloyd George, Mr. Bonar Law, Mr. Ramsay Mac-Donald, and Mr. Baldwin-and, whatever their other differences may have been, their testimony is unanimous and enthusiastic that they have always found His Majesty considerate, sympathetic and helpful. He shows that he understands their problems as well as they do themselves.

HIS MAJESTY'S TASTES

TYPICAL ENGLISH GENTLEMAN

ARDENT PHILATELIST AND HISTORY STUDENT

(By a Special Correspondent.)

The "divinity that doth hedge a King" inevitably leads to some difficulty in distinguishing between the man and the monarch. But there is little obscurity in the case-of King George. He isa typical English gentleman, of frugal tastes and quiet habits, who would rather "hear the lark sing than the mouse squeak." Had he been born in another sphere, he would have lived on his estate sedulously performing the duties and enjoying the recreations of a country squire.

Though he has no pretensions to the title of "Farmer George" bestowed on one of his predecessors he conforms to the highest standards of a good landlord, notably by setting his neighbours and tenants an example of the scientific use of his property.

An eight months' child, he was delicate in his youth, but by the time he joined the Navy he had become a strong, merry, and high-spirited boy, eager to share in the sky-larking of his contemporaries. As a young man he suffered much from dyspepsia, which required a strict discipline in respect of diet whether solid or fluid, and the habit then formed from necessity he has continued from choice. A friend of mine, who stayed with the Duke and Duchess of Yorkas they then were-in their modest quarters in York Cottage, San-dringham, told me that it was like living in a suburban middle-class house-"with a couple of maids and no fuss".

Perhaps these were the King's most care-free days. An ideally happy marriage, and a noisy young family growing up around him, gave him the main essentials of felicity. Dividing most of his time between Sandringham and Marlborough House, he loved to escape for: a few weeks in the Spring to Decside, where he spent long days on the river, or in the Autumn in grouse-shooting and deer-stalking. He was then recognised as one of the six finest shots in this country, and though now he has to accept the strict limits imposed by his doctors, he still enjoys a few hours in the grouse butts or at the pheasant coverts. In London and at Windsor his favourite exercise is riding, but for hunting he never cared, and, though he attends race-meetings, it is largely as a matter of filial duty rather than inclination. Now that he owns a stud, he prefers, like other owners, to see his horses win rather than lose, but his interest in that side of life, and all that goes with it, is languid.

He tried golf, on the testimony of the Prince of Wales, but gave it up because he saw no fun in a game which merely made one lose one's temper. If he could choose his own way of spending a free afternoon, he would rather see good rugger match than all the race meetings that ever were held, and he would attend these matches oftener were it not that his presence entails a certain amount of trouble to all concerned, and might tend to encourage the watching rather than the playing

Indoor the King's, chief hobby a his collection of stamps, which is one of the finest in existence. Its foundation was laid when he was a midshipman, and he has added to it with a discriminating enthusiasm. He sets aside one afternoon a week for a study of his treasures, and he is an unpopular visitor who chooses that time for seeking an audience. He cares little for cards, and, like his father, he prefers to study men rather than books. State papers leave him little leisure for more attractive literature, and on that side of life—as in many other things—he has to depend on the Queen, whose reading is omni-

His special diterary interest is history. He reads this extensively, and I have been told by an eminent academician that the King would be well qualified to hold a Chair of History at any University. For what is called Societywhether it is spelt with a small letter or a large—neither the King nor the Queen has any inclination. They see no fun in leaving their own fireside to take part in even the gayest and most brilliant of social gatherings. It would be too much to say that they have made the domestic virtues fashiomable, but at least they have given no countenance to the vulgar and ostentatious activities of the so-called "smart set". The names which figure most in the so-called Society columns do not appear in the Court-Circular.

It is typical of the King's methodical habits, and his strength of mind, that ever since he was a lad he has kept a diary, and up to the time he became King he had never missed a day in making his entries. The volumes are bound and preserved, but he has given instructions that they are to be destroyed at his death, although, according to his death, although, according to those intimates who have seen thom, they contain much valuable historical, material, and nothing that it could do harm to publish.

KING'S MESSAGE ON ACCESSION

FAITH IN FUTURE

The following Message to his People was issued by His Majesty the King on his Accession in 1910: Marlborough House, Pall Mall, S.W., May 22nd., 1910. To My People.

The voice of affection and loving devotion to the memory of my dear Father which has come from every corner of the Empire, the outward public demonstrations, especially those in the capital during the two stages of his going to his last resting place, and the sympathetic manner in which vast multitudes patiently and reverently awaited the opportunity of paying a last tribute to his memory, have profoundly touched me and my Family.

A sorrow so sudden and unlooked-for might well have been overwhelming. But the sent ments evoked by it have made me realise that it is a loss common to me and my people; they share it with me.

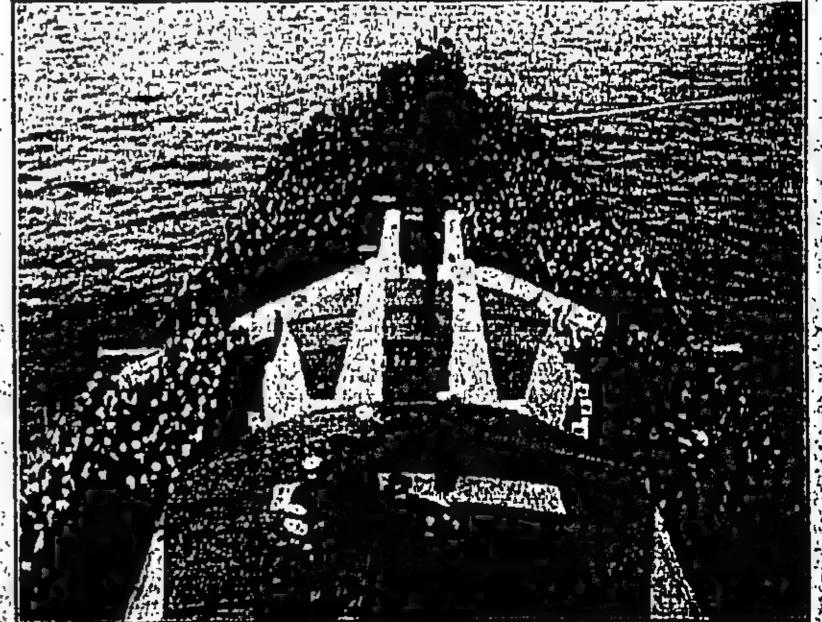

I do not stand alone. With such thoughts I take courage, and hopefully look into the future, strong in my faith in God, trusting my people, and cherishing the Laws and Constitution of my beloved .Country.

HUMAN SIDE OF ROYALTY

KINDLY THOUGHTS FOR OTHERS

PRACTICAL SYMPATHY WITH DISABLED SOLDIERS

(By a Special Correspondent.)

This royal reign, which has brought monarch and subject into such close touch, has been crowded with a thousand and one little incidents that have shown-how-human-is the outlook of the King and Queen. This is more noticeable, perhaps; since the War, which demonstrated to the King the great, affection and loyalty of his people, and showed fighting men and their dependents how real was the concern of Their Majesties for those who suffered.

The Queen has always been so extraordinarily shy that it has never been easy for her to break down the barriers of reserve and show her real feelings and in the first few years of the King's reign it was often said that she was cold and aloof. Her upright bearing, the fact that she did not appear to smile easily and that her expression when her features were in repose was a little stern, gave colour to this suggestion, yet even in those days the grief and the suffering of others caused her the grief and the suffering of others caused her the taining some friends from the makes a point of attending and deepest distress.

During a pre-War tour of industrial districts in the Midlands, a terrible colliery disaster occurred within a few miles of Wentworth Woodhouse, where the be allowed to drive to the pit in which the accident had happened.

Those who escorted them expected that the royal car would. be taken to the Manager's office, and that the King would make inquiries there and ask that his sympathy with the sufferers and their dependents should be expressed.

Instead, His Majesty asked to be taken to the pithead, where women were-waiting for news of their husbands and sons, and where grim stories were being brought of death, injury, and terrible disfigurement.

Arrived there, both the King and the Queen left the car and went from group to group of the relatives of men who were known to be down the mine, asking questions here, giving encouragement and sympathy there, and trying to chair and time to use it. From that time the hospital has always received a gift of daffodils from the Queen at Easter-time. It is one of her self-imposed duties, when the Court goes to Windsor for the early spring visit, to spend a good many hours in the wild part, of the Castle grounds and in Windsor Great Park, cutting the beautiful golden Lenten lilies that grow there in such profusion, and having them sent off, under her personal supervision, to the big London hospitals. Since she has been old enough to do so, Princess Elizabeth has invariably helped with this task, choosing what she calls "the weeny ones" to make up into bunches for children's wards and

KING AND QUEEN FAMILY FOLK

DEEP AFFECTION IN THE HOME

GRANDCHILDREN CONSTANT SOURCE OF JOY

(By a Special Correspondent.)

The King and Queen are family folk. Nothing is dearer to them than the old traditions of family life,-and-they-make-a-great-effort—in-spite-of-thetime taken by their national duties—to keep them up in their own home. A deep affection binds them to their children, and they like to be kept informed of all that is going on. Long letters pass between the Queen and her only daughter every week, and the King, whose sincere affection for the Princess marriage, brought her enough Royal has been one of the most beautiful things in his family life, looks forward to these weekly budgets telling all that she and her children have been doing.

Between the Princess and her father there is, perhaps, a greater bond of sympathy than that which exists between father and sons. For the King has old-fashioned ideas about the women of his house, whom he feels should be cared for and protected as they were in the days of his grandmother.

Eventually he issued what was virtually an ultimatum that she must not be allowed to do much in public life until she had regained her strength.

It is only necessary to see father and daughter together to realise their affection for each other. In Scotland a year or two ago, when the Princess was in residence with Their Majesties at Holyrood House, a royal garden party was given as part of the week's programme. After the first presentations had been made, the Queen and her suite went one way, and the King and the Princess Royal the other to seek out guests to whom they wished to speak. His Majesty was in perfect health and in great good humour, and evidently anxious that the Princess should share his pleasure at the re-union with Scottish

The Princess's little sons are a constant source of joy to their grandparents. Both are sturdy boys, extremely intelligent, as fond of horses and of riding as is their mother, and very keen, since they went to preparatory school, about sports, especially cricket. The elder one, Viscount Lascelles, is being specially coached now by an old Yorkshire cricketer, and it is the hope of his mother, his grandfather, and his uncles that he may some day play for Eton—to which he is going on—at Lord's.

SOCIAL ROUND OF YEAR

KING'S NUMEROUS OBLIGATIONS

MARKED WIDENING OF ROYAL ACTIVITIES.

(By a Special Correspondent.)

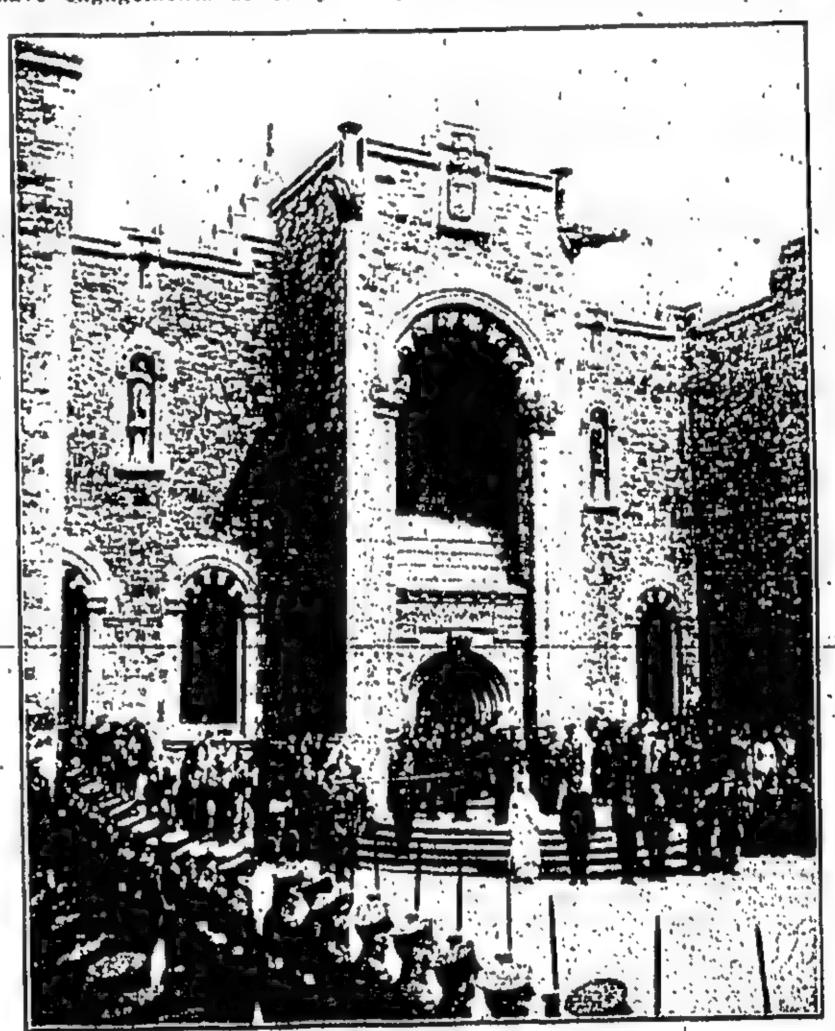

The earliest of the King's diaries after his accession must be very different in character from those which are kept by his Private Secretary, Sir Clive Wigram, to-day. Then, a visit to the provinces was in the nature of a great event; there were fewer big public functions in London to which the King and Queen went officially; and, apart from the six weeks of the London Season, life was lived much more slowly and simply than it is to-day.

The London Season has always involved a great. many functions at Buckingham Palace, and the programme so far as these are concerned has not changed a great deal. The King's Levees, the Royal Courts, and the royal garden party take place as usual, with the exception that each separate event is on a much larger scale.

KING'S VISIT TO HONGKONG

AS YOUNG NAVAL CADET

MAGNIFICENT WELCOME BY ALL SECTIONS OF COMMUNITY

In commemorating the Silver Jubilee of the function it is stated: reign of His Majesty King George, this Colony can claim to have a special interest, for the King visited Hongkong in his youth, and we may be sure recollects the occasion and retains pleasant memories of his stay of about ten days.

The Colony did all it could to make the young Prince George and his elder brother, Prince Albert V'ctor, welcome; and although they came as very junior officers on a warship—they were Midshipnen on H.M.S. Bacchante—and elaborate functions in their honour would have been out of place, there were frequent manifestations of loyalty and respect by all sections of the community. Hongkong rightly felt that it had been honoured by the visit of two grandsons of Her Majesty Queen Victoria.

For data relating to that early visit, which took place at the end of 1881, we cannot do better than turn to the newspaper files of the time. The following account is extracted from various issues of the Hongkong Telegraph, which was not bohind any of its contemporaries in bidding the Royal Middies welcome.

In its issue of December 20, 1881, the Telegraph reported the eagerly-awaited arrival. We read: The Detached Squadron hove in sight in the Ly-ce-moon Pass shortly after noon to-day, and steaming slowly into the Harbour anchored in line outside the Iron Duke and the Victor Emanuel." Then follows a reference to the Princes, who were aboard one of the ships in the squadron. Of our present King and his brother

it was stated: HIGHLY POPULAR

The Princes received some preliminary education in the training ship Britannia, and then joined the Bacchante as cadets. During their first voyage to the West indies they were promoted to the position of midshipmen, and they still occupy that rank in the same vessel. In their cruise with the squadron they have mixed a good deal with the officers of all the vessels, with whom they seem to be highly popular. They have to perform their share of the actual duties of the ship. They also receive rifle and cutlass drill, instruction in navigation, steam and seamanship. They have to mess with the midshipmen and endets in the gun-room, and according to report their birth and station have not protected them from practical jokes and the customary horse-play. Prince Albert is represented as a quiet, pleasant, and unassuming young gentleman, and his younger brother, Prince George, as a more vivacious youth, and both as pupils with keen apprehension." In its issue of December 23 the paper stated:

formances were being carried on from noon yesterday until midnight, and will be continued to-day and to-morrow.

"The illuminations in front of the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank were exceedingly well got up, and those on the Parade Ground ovidenced some decorative skill.

The fireworks and crackers were not so freely used as was anticipated, the rain which fell throughout the night partially spoiling this part of the programme and throw-ing a damper over the entire proceedings, which terminated shortly after midnight.

"The steam engines of the Government fire brigades were posted along the Praya with steam up ready for any emergency. Thirty of the unemployed seamen at the Sailors' Home, have been engaged to do duty with the fire brigade during the illuminations, and would no doubt render efficient aid should their services be required.

"The illuminations, processions, and fireworks will be resumed tonight, and continued on Saturday evening."

These various decorative and entertaining efforts were, of course, mainly for the benefit of the two Princes: the Colony was certainly doing all it could to make their visit a memorable one.

VARIOUS FESTIVITIES

We read in the paper of December 24: "Last night the weather had improved a good deal for the Chinese festivities, although the roads were muddy and slippery. The illuminations were much better than on the previous night.

"Several hundreds of dwarf plants had been received from Canton during the day, and were exhibited along Queen's Road and the Prayn. The buildings most conspicuous in China Town for the illuminations were the Mau On Insurance Office, the On Tai Insurance Office, and the several "curlo" shops along Queen's Road. Several European houses were also illuminated last night, including the offices of Mr. E. R. Belilios, Mesers, H. M. M. Ally and Co., and Hajce Mohammed and Co., a Lyndhurst Terrace; and Jewish Synagogue and Messra, Tata and Company's premises, Messrs, Gaupp and Co's, Mr. Afong's, the Hongkong Hotel and the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank in Queen's Road.

"The fireworks on the Parade Ground began about 8 p.m. 'and were continued up to 11 o'clock. There were present hundreds of Europeans, including a number of ladies, and several thousands of Celestials. The several detachments of the procession with both the dragons, joined together at the junction of Caine Road, and promenaded-along Caine Road and paid a visit to Government House. We learn from the Master of Ceremonies that His Excellency expressed himself .. well pleased with the show. The procession then retired, and proceeded down along Queen's Road by the Murray Barracks. The principal features of the procession were about a thousand parti-coloured lanterns. 200 fishes lit up with candles, 30 girls dresped in richly embroidered clothing, and painted in highly approved fashion, two dragons, and several hundred other curiosities. To-night being the last night of the festivities, will surpass all previous shows."

The Chinese community were certainly doing their bit in staging a right Royal celebration, and the whole Colony was sharing in this manifestation. In an editorial article on December 27 the Telegraph voiced the sentiments of the residents, as follows:

COLONY'S LOYALTY

"Although the Princes Albert and George of Wales have not visited us with all the pomp and grandeur usually associated with their high rank, but merely as junior officers of the British Nuvy, the members of the Community of Hongkong, have not been backward in honouring the occasion by a series of celebrations, which, in spite of all drawbacks, must have proved eminently gratifying to the sons of the future King of Great Britain and Ireland and Emperor of India. If proofs of the thorough loyalty of the inhabitants of this Colony to the Royal Family and the old established, traditions of our Country were needed, the almost universal homage and respect spontaneously paid on Saturday night by every section of our ultra-cosmopolitan community, in every possible way, to the young scions of Royalty would have convinced the most hardened sceptic. The spirit of Socialism and Republicanism is undoubtedly spreading its way rapidly over the face of the civilised globe, and there can be little doubt that even in the oldest established of European monarchies an uneasy feeling of insecurity has in consequence lately developed itself. In England, Republican or Radical tendencies are unquestionably a great power in the State; and have very properly been recognised as an important factor in the political history of the Empire, without, however, in any way affecting the however, in any way affecting the wide-spread deep seated feeling of loyalty to the reigning family, and reverence for the old constitution which has served the country so well through some of the most trying chapters in the world's history. The loyalty of Britons to Her Majesty Queen Victoria and the members of the Royal Family, forms a national characteristic of which, in these days of revolu-tionary measures and pronounced socialisms they have every reason to be proud. We do not think we are exaggerating in the slightest degree in expressing our conviction, that in no part of that immense Empire—on which the sun never sets, the mightiest the world has over seen-can there exist a more loyal feeling than in this little Anglo-Chinese Colony of Hongkong.

"The natural veneration which the Chinese have for their own Emperors and high nobility could hardly be exceeded by the unswerving loyalty which they have on every possible occasion, of late years, done their utmost to show towards the gracious Sovereign inches whose handleant away that under whose beneficent sway they have reaped the many benefits indissolubly associated with onlightened government. The recop-tion tendered to the young Princes is the natural outcome of this inherent spirit of loyalty to the Crown, and has therefore a political significance, which can hardly be over-estimated.

To the westward of the Club the style of illumination was almost uniform, and presented no striking features until the Stag Hotel was reached. Mine host of this popular hostelry had evidently aid himself out to produce display worthy of the occasion, and he certainly achieved a remarkable degree of success. Stretching from the Club castward the prettily designed device at Mr. T. N. the minor streets of the Colony the illuminations although not so elaborate as those in th Queen's Road and Praya, were in many instances worthy of special notice. The German Club in Wyndham Street was plainly but prettilly-arranged. The Telegraph Majesty's stay in Hongkong. office in Wellington Street was of course the observed of all obserthe decorations-such as they were-filling the dwellers in the immediate neighbourhood with admiration and awe. The old Hotel do l'Univers was effectively decorated with flags and lanterns, and several devices and mottoes were very prettily lit up and arranged. The fountain in the centre of the portico, with plants artistically arranged, and the green and white crystal device "A Merry Christmas" was really most effective. The road leading from Wyndham Street to Caine Road was lined up with lanterns, and the pagoda, lit up with manycoloured lumps, had a most picturesque effect. Mr. Manager's house had a striking appearance; and the Brazilian Consulate was one blaze of light.

"The Portuguese Club, and Mr. J. A. Remedios's residence were also prettily illuminated, and the splendid mansion occupied by Messrs, Birley and Co. was one of the sights of the Colony. There were many other decorations of interest to which space will not permit us to allude in detail.

PRINCES VIEW DISPLAY

"It must be gratifying to the public to know that the lads who were thus so; highly honoured by the spontaneous action of the entire community, showed their appreciation of the courtesy by coming ashore and personally inspecting the whole line of the illuminations. In company with their tutor, the Rev. J. N. Dalton, they landed at the Naval Yard, w. M. Denne, Capt. Superintendent of Police, and Mr. H. E. Woodhouse, Honorary Secretary of the Reception Committee, walked through the principal streets, and expressed themselves greatly delighted with all they saw.

The Chinese also drew up an Address for presentation to the Royal visitors. We read:

"A . handsomely liliuminated address to the Princes by the Chinese community will, understand, be forwarded H.E. the Governor to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. It was at first intended that the Princes should personally receive deputations, at Government House, representing the Foreign and Chinese sections of the inhabitants of Hongkong, but this intention would appear to have been abandoned at the

LOOKING BACK 25 YEARS

KING'S ACCESSION AND CORONATION

MARKED BY PICTURESQUE SCENES IN HONGKONG

The Colony of Hongkong is on the eve of celebrating the Silver - Jubilee of the reign of His Majesty King George the Fifth, and decorations, illumina-tions, parades, and other manifestations of loyal rejoicing will soon be evident. Let us turn back the pages for just a quarter of a century, and see how the accession of His Majesty, and, the following year, the King's Coronation, were celebrated. It is indeed interesting to look back and discover what was done in the Colony at the time. We find, of course, that the late King's illness, when he was stricken with bronchitis, caused much anxiety out here, and the news of his death, early in May, 1910, was received with great sorrow. There was an impressive ceremony on the Hongkong Cricket Club ground when the new King's accession was proclaimed out here.

Three cheers were then given for the King, on the call of Sir Henry May, a royal salute being at the same time fired from the warships in the harbour. This concluded the teremony, during which all tram and other vehicular traffic was suspended.

A special meeting had been held the same afternoon of the Executive and Legislative Councils, Sir Henry May presiding. He said:

"I have the honour to submit the following resolution to thishonourable Council:-That the Members of this Council have heard with profound sorrow the unnouncement of the death of his late Majesty, King Edward VII, and desire to tender their humble duty and to express their most heart-felt, loyal and respectful sympathy with Her Majesty Queen Alexandra, Their Majestics the King and Queen and the Royal family in their bereavement. The resolution was adopted, and sent Home.

THE CORONATION

Arrangements for the celebration of the Coronation, the following year, were put in hand quite early, and an elaborate programme was drawn up. The celebrations took place in June 1911, and the following is a summary of the events which were approved by the Hongkong Coronation Committee for the first night, on June 22 of that year.

H.E. the Governor held a public reception at Government House, the guests attending the reception passing into the gardens, which were connected with the Public (Botanic) Gardens, the swhole being beautifully illuminated with Japanese lanterns. Refreshments were served, and a military band played selections, in the Public

Those who expected the Rumjahns to carry everything before them in this stanza were dooned to disappointment. The challengers fought every inch of the way. The scores of the match were 4-0. 6-8, 6-0, 6-3 and 6-4,
